INTS 401-900: Urbanism and Modernism

Hannaford MW 5:35 - 6:50

As over half of the world's population now lives in cities, and this is projected to increase, urban space is more than ever a rich site of exploration to understand questions of identity, economy, culture and human variation. In this class, we will take an interdisciplinary approach to examining the city and city life, with case studies of five cities around the world.

INTS 405: War and Memory Shandley

Section 901: TR 1:30 - 2:45

Section 902: TR 3:15 - 4:30

The course will engage debates globally about collective memory and the politics of memory in relationship to war. We will ask questions of how societies make meaning out of their past and to what end. Our objects of study will range from trench poetry and art to monuments to narrative film and memoirs. As a "W" course, we will also engage heavily in the process of posing a research question and planning and executing a research paper.
